POTTED HISTORY

The Coquetvale is an original grand railway hotel, originally known as The Station Hotel, built in the early 1880's by the Victorian industrialist, the first Lord Armstrong, shortly after the opening of the original Newcastle to Rothbury railway line to make it easier for visitors to get to his home, Cragside.

Services were reduced to two a day during World War II. Increasing competition from road transport made the line increasingly uneconomical. Sadly passenger services were withdrawn in 1952, the line closed in 1963 and the tracks lifted in 1964.

Since 1964 the hotel has gone through various stages of prosperity and poverty, and was purchased by Catherine and David Taylor in August 2016 with the aim of restoring this lovely hotel to its rightful position within the Rothbury community.

The hotel is in the very capable management of Catherine's sister, Alison Walklett, who, with David, have almost 60 years combined experience of owning and running successful hotels. The Coquetvale is, and will be, a long term labour of love, and we genuinely hope that you enjoy your visit to us, and keep coming back.
